To begin with, regarding body type and gender. There will be no toggle 'Male/Female'. Every character will have a base gender-less body. They will then customize the width of their shoulders, their hip to torso ratio, and their height on a triangular slider interface. The result will be characters as manly as possible or as effeminately as one wants their thief to be or some kind of combination of gender-bending, customized avatar with a necessary agile fighting body.

In terms of faces and hair styling it will maintain the stylized, cel-shaded aesthetic as one would expect from the game but also much broader representation. Hair styles may range from traditional disheveled, chaotic Joker hair styles to dreadlocks, extremely asymmetrical styles or cleanly shaved heads and any hair style can be unlocked and selected regardless of body type. One feature of the face is the "Thief Mask." These would range from classic designs (domino mask, masquerade mask etc) to display how much of the characters face other characters see.

Lastly, perhaps there is most scope for choice in gear. Whilst every character would be given some variation of the iconic billowing trench coat (to maintain some narrative connection as a Phantom Thief) what this customizable gear provides would be the variety of sub-culture styling one desired. Fancy velvet designs, punk-rock leather or a cyberpunk-techno wear with blinking neon light will ensure that every kind of character looks the part, debonair or grimy.
