

Avatar as Object: <https://codeforces.com/profile/roonil03>

My Codeforces handle can act as an Avatar as Object, because it's an "impersonal" use of an algorithmic competitive programming profile. To me, this digital representation is a "pawn" I move around in order to maximize some quantifiable outcome (either the successful solving of an algorithmic contest problem, or the improvement of my Elo type rating). There are no sentiments behind it; it's a "cold" mechanical interface that I can use to make numbers "go up". I am essentially using it as a "mechanical test bed" for my logic to see if my ratings can keep climbing up.

Avatar as Me: <https://github.com/Roonil03>

My GitHub profile is the archetype of Avatar as Me as it is literally the digital manifestation of who I am as a technologist and my journey. By using animated statistics and profile indicators I am actively showing where I'm developing and thus forming a direct correlation to my development history. This is not a website but a living exhibition of what I know in terms of language and cloud infrastructure. This has high Self-Presence due to the fact the Repositories I'm building are actual products of my cognitive input.

Avatar as Symbiote: <https://www.codechef.com/users/roonil03>

For CodeChef I categorize my persona as Avatar as Symbiote. This is a category I had the hardest time categorizing because it involves an element of a "combined" identity and the user and avatar function as one entity. The reason it functions in my case, is that my logical input has to fuse flawlessly with a fixed, competitive structure with defined levels. It is a "we" thing because my logical knowledge works in tandem with the system to create upward mobility on the ladder; it is a relationship of shared agency because my rank reflects the execution.

Avatar as Other: <https://www.wattpad.com/user/Roonil03>

My story character "The Gatherer" is an Avatar as Other. In terms of lecture he is a completely distinct creation, with his own, autonomous history, and set of characteristics completely removed from my personal life. I see him as a Creator studying an object, and not as a manifestation of my own being. He operates by his own agency as an "Information Dealer," making him a Non-Merged autonomous creation. I frankly consider his objects and his actions to reside on a different logical plane altogether.